His new AllCast Receiver for Chrome lets you send photos, videos and your device screen to anything with a Chrome web browser on the local network. If you want to use your Chromebook as a makeshift TV, you can. It's not quite as slick as sharing content between native apps, though. You can't use the wireless headset feature with video, and screen mirroring isn't seamless. With that said, this is still one of the easier ways put your phone's media collection on a bigger display. Popular on Engadget AllCast Receiver for Chrome is an app that makes your Chromebook or any computer with Chrome a Chromecast receiver. The recent update to this app has added screen mirroring. Exciting to 23k plus users who have installed this app, and super exciting to those who do not own a Chromecast yet! Also, the free version gets rid of that pesky 10-minute streaming limit to Chromecasts. The developer, Koushik Dutta has replaced that limitation with a watermark. The update also brings new features like "Recent" section for recently watched content, a new transcoding engine, improved proxy server for devices like the Roku etc. You can download the Chrome App from here. If you do not have AllCast for Android installed, download it from here. Written ByDinsanContent Developer and Digital Minimalist. I love testing new Chromebook features and writing about them. My favorite Chrome OS Channel is Canary. | Twitter Let's face it: when it comes to consuming media or surfing social media, many people have forgotten their computers, instead they use their phones. However, in AllCast Receiver the screen is not big enough to enjoy the content. In this article we will show you everything you need to know about AllCast so that you can see the content on a larger screen. With AllCast, you can stream everything on your phone directly to your computer or Android box. You can also stream from one phone to another and even directly to your video game console! Features: AllCast and AllCast Receiver are available for Android devices. AllCast Receiver is also available for Google Chrome. The fact that Google Chrome is available on all operating systems means that you can use AllCast Receiver with Windows, Mac, Chrome OS and Linux computers. The application supports audio and video streaming, photo sharing and screen sharing. You can download the Chrome AllCast Receiver extension for free from the Chrome web store. The Android application has a free version and a premium version available. AllCast Premium costs $ 4.99 and removes ads and the free 5-minute video version. If you want to stream longer videos, you may need to purchase the application. How do I install AllCast Receiver on Windows? Instructions for installing AllCast Receiver on Windows XP / 7/8/10 PC and laptop In this post, I will show you how to install AllCast Receiver on a Windows PC using the Android application player such as BlueStacks, Nox, KOPlayer, Before you start, you need to download the apk installation file. The download button is at the top of this page. Keep it in an easy to find a place. [Note]: You can also download previous versions of this application at the bottom of this page. Below is a detailed step-by-step guide. However, I would like to give you a quick overview of how it works. All you need is an emulator that emulates an Android device on your Windows PC. You can then install and use applications. You will see that you are actually playing it on Android, but this does not work on a smartphone or tablet, but on a PC If this doesn't work on your PC or you can't install it, comment it here and we will help you! How to install AllCast Receiver with NoxPlayer on a Windows PC Download and install the NoxPlayer at our Guide The installation is easy to do. Drag and drop the APK file onto Nox. The file manager is displayed. Click the Open XXX Folder button below the file that turns blue. You can then install the apk you just downloaded from your computer onto Nox or move/copy the file to another location in Nox. Conclusion: These are just a few options, but there will be more soon. Also, the developer found that the connection between this program and Chromecast is an ongoing project in the future. It has an official Google license. Also, The disadvantage of AllCast is that it is not yet available for PS3. ClockwordMod's Koushik Dutta has taken streaming to the next level with AllCast. It has been associated to the popular Chromecast dongle because both became popular at around the same time, but there is much more to AllCast than just Cast support. This is the epitome of local streaming services. AllCast supports streaming to other smart TV devices, consoles, Blu-ray players and more. In fact, they recently added support for streaming to any other Android device, and today Koushik Dutta is taking on another platform by securing its presence in Chrome for desktop (on any device that can support full Chrome). AllCast Receiver for Chrome supports anything the Android app can throw at it, including audio, video, closed captions, music, mirroring and more. Really, it is only limited to what the app can do. This includes size limitations if you are using the trial version. It's really that simple. Do keep in mind AllCast for Chrome requires the newest AllCast app version. This update has started rolling out, so make sure you get it from the Google Play Store if you haven't yet. Just in case a written explanation doesn't cut it, we have also embedded Koush's demo right above. He tests the main features, so give it a look and enjoy! Developer Koushik Dutta's AllCast is an app designed to let you send photos, videos, or music on your phone to other devices. When it first launched, that meant you could use it to stream videos to a TV with a Roku box or a video game console. Recently AllCast Receiver added support for streaming from one Android device to another. Now there's an AllCast Receiver app for Chrome which lets you turn pretty much any computer with the Chrome web browser into a receiver. All you have to do is install the app on your Windows, Mac, Chrome OS, or Linux computer, fire up AllCast on your phone, and you can stream content from your mobile device to your PC. The app supports audio and video. It can handle closed captions. And there's support for screen mirroring, allowing you to display everything happening on your phone on a bigger PC display. AllCast Receiver is available for free from the Chrome Web Store. The AllCast Android app is also free... but you'll need to pay $4.99 for AllCast Premium if you want a version with no limits on video length. via r/AndroidLiliputing's primary sources of revenue are advertising and affiliate links (if you click the "Shop" button at the top of the page and buy something on Amazon, for example, we'll get a small commission).
